NOTICE TO OUR CLIENTS

The most common reasons a bad check may be returned to our clients are:

1. The inability to prove who wrote the check. To prove who wrote the check, we rely completely on our clients. If the person accepting the bad check requires the check writer to show identification by requesting a valid California Driver’s License (CDL) or California Identification Card (CID), we are halfway home. The check acceptor must witness the person signing the check. The acceptor must write and/or verify the CDL or CID number on the check and then initial the check to indicate they witnessed and/or verified this necessary identification. A problem may arise here when the check acceptor relies on the fact that the check has a CDL or CID already preprinted on the check or handwritten on the check by the check writer-- this does not prove that the person’s whose identification was used was the person who wrote the check. The check acceptor should still require the check writer to show proper picture identification, verify the information and follow suggested check cashing procedures. If we have two checks that meet requirements including the verification information written on the check, we do not need to go any further to prove who the check writer was in order to prosecute.
2. The second reason is to prove intent to defraud by the bad check writer. If the bad check writer did not have the “specific intent” to write the bad check, he cannot be prosecuted. This “specific intent” is usually shown by the status of the check writer’s account at the time the check(s) was written. This evidence we obtain from the bank or credit union when we request account information.
3. The third reason a check may be returned is due to the time limitations. If the check(s) written by one person totals less than $900, we have one year from the date the check(s) is written to file misdemeanor criminal charges. If the check(s) total over $900, we have three years to file felony charges. When these time periods expire, the checks are not useable for prosecution.
4. For different reasons, some bad checks may be considered noncriminal or statutorily ineligible for prosecution under this program. These include: two-party checks, income tax checks, insurance claim checks, payroll checks, stop-payment checks, post-dated checks and checks received through the mail.

SUGGESTED CHECK CASHING GUIDELINES

Read every check carefully for the following eight points as shown below on the sample check:

1. MUST be personalized -- i.e. Complete name and street address preprinted by the bank. NO Post Office Boxes.
2. Date must be current -- NO post-dated or pre-dated checks.
3. Bank identification number
4. Payee must be you or your company if you are a business.
5. Dollar values written and numerical must be for the same amount.
6. Bank or credit union name and address must be printed on the check.
7. Bank or credit union number (should begin with 12 or 32) and customer computer number must be pre-printed on the check.
8. Customer signature - Must be signed in your presence.
